

State to inspect more dams on Pit River before resolving Big Valley ranchers water complaints

BY MEG FOX

Several ranchers in Big Valley are anxious for the state Water Resources Control Board to answer the complaints that have been filed, but the state s water rights complaint division said last week it wants to inspect at least 10 dams on the Pit River before issuing a report.

"Things are at a standstill, temporarily," said David LaBrie, the to do additional on site inspections state engineer investigating the complaints.

LaBrie said that while his office was investigating one complaint, filed almost a year ago against the Hot Spring Valley Irrigation District in Alturas, two more complaints were filed and the issues are related.

As a result, LaBrie said, "we want and look at some dams on the Pit River to see how they are operated and also see how they relate to the district s operation."

Gary Monchamp and Tom Landes, who have ranches in Lookout and who reside in the Big Valley Water Users District, and rancher Lawrence Ray of Alturas, filed separate complaints against the Hot Spring Irrigation District, which serves water users above the Canby Bridge, west of Canby.

The Big Valley Water Users district serves the area south of the Canby Bridge through Bieber

Among the various issues are charges that the Hot Spring district illegally diverted Pit River water during irrigation season and then offered it for sale.

The Big Valley water users say the natural water flow in the Pit River below Canby Bridge has ceased and they don t believe is just because it was a dry year.

It snot the first time Hot Spring has been in hot water. -Please See Page 2

Believe it – or not.

Local legend Ivan Marx of Burney and his legendary films of Bigfoot are in the news this week - all over the national and international news, in fact.

In 1977, Marx reportedly captured the elusive, hairy beast on 16 mm film as it wandered off into the wintry woods near Bossburg, Wash.

But that Abominable Snowman was merely an abominable joke and news sources are reporting that the Bigfootage was actually that of Ray L. Wallace, wearing some sort of monkey suit and 16-inch-long wooden feet to leave intriguing tracks in the snow.

When Mr. Wallace, 84, died Nov. 26 in Centralia, Wash., his family 'fessed up, though it appears it all started as a joke that got out of hand for the fun-loving prankster.

Some anthropologists and other experts were suspicious from the start – but there are others who believe Bigfoot is still out there, among them a vacationer who spotted Sasquatch at Burney Falls in 1980; firefighters who in 1987 reported seeing Bigfoot running across a field near Mt. Shasta while they were playing volleyball; and in Round Mountain where one resident was sure the beast was in her backyard on Fenders Ferry Road in 1971.

Thanks for the holiday cheer go to the Burney Lions Club, which has taken on the project, especially ringleaders Rex Vaughn and Chuck Evans and their elves Stuart Carty, Jim Moore, Ernie Glaser, and Steve Vaughn and Frontier Communications, which actually did most of the decorating via their boom truck.

Evans said the Lions Club decided to get the holiday lights "full of yellow jacket nests" out of storage and had a work party to do some repairing and re-bulbing. Watch for more trees on the lane to light up as funds and time allow.

Winter advice from the CHP: A couple who spent a long night in their car when it became stuck in the snow near Medicine Lake Nov. 30 has prompted the California Highway Patrol to remind drivers to keep a Winter Driving Box in their vehicles.

The box should contain extra blankets, gloves, a flashlight with extra batteries, portable radio with extra batteries, water, food and, if possible, a cellular phone.

You could also add a camp shovel, boots, socks, hats, and matches – and maybe a good book.

The CHP reported that the tow truck sent to rescue the couple also became stuck. The couple had enough provisions for the night, but was rescued by a private vehicle.

Hagge, who is also chairman of the Modoc County Board of Supervisors, said he was as anxious as anyone to see the state report on the recent complaints, and promised to "conform to any redirection they give us as to future water management."

The ranchers also believe water was being regulated for private business gain.

They said there were payments from Malacha Hydro Power, the 30-megawatt hydro project seven miles south of Bieber, paid to Big Valley Ranches, a limited partnership south of Bieber, which in turn paid Hot Spring.

The complaints also cite payments of more than $29,000 to individual dam owners

Arraignment scheduled for man charged in shooting

The Anderson man charged with involuntary manslaughter in the Sept. 21 shooting death of his hunting companion, Michael Wood, 28, of Cassel, will be arraigned Jan. 6 in Shasta County Superior Court.

The death occurred when Park fired his rifle across the dirt road and shot and killed Wood, who was about 150 to 200 feet away, according to the Shasta County Sheriff s Office.

The accident was reported at 7:20 a.m.

SHASTA COUNTY DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

The WINTER SEASON IS here again and with it comes the problem of keeping the county roads clear of snow. By its very nature, this task requires the cooperative efforts of everyone.

Usually there are two separate snow removal operations. The first during the storm itself and consists of quick passes with the plows to keep the roads open. Priority is given to school bus routes and the most heavily traveled roads. Chains or snow tires are recommended during this period.

The second operation begins when the storm abates. It consists of widening the cleared portion of the traveled way and cleaning up. This provides space to store additional snow should another storm occur and improves the safety and usability of the road.

The time required for each operation varies with the severity of the storm, the temperature, the importance of the road, and the availability of personnel and equipment. It may be several days between the first plowing and final cleanup.

Unfortunately, each operation may result in a window of snow across private driveways or encroachments to county roads. The County does not have the resources to keep private driveways clear. This is the responsibility of each individual resident or business. Reasonable effort is made to plow in a manner that will minimize the size of the window.

It is important that there are no obstructions, such as parked vehicles, trailers or basketball standards, in the roadway when snow removal is apt to occur. This hampers operations and prevents complete clearing of the road. In some cases this can prevent an entire street from being cleared. Cars parked in the roadway during snow removal will be towed at the owner's expense.

Some suggestions are:

- * Park vehicles off the roadway.
- * Have good snow tires or chains, and use them as needed
- * Residents and businesses should keep the windrows cleared from across their driveways. Pile the snow past the driveway in the direction of travel.

* Mailboxes need to be set back far enough from the traveled way to provide sufficient clearance for the snow removal equipment and should be sturdy enough to withstand having snow pushed against them.

Hopefully, everyone can work together to successfully handle this winter's problems. If you have any questions or suggestions, please contact either Ed Johnson, Operations Superintendent, or Troy Bartolomei, Deputy Director, at (530) 225-5661.

"We vegot a good group with some young newcomers but I think the older guys will help them along and wrestle pretty solid while there at it," coach Jack Strickland noted. "We still have to spread out our weight classes because we have about five guys in the 160-71 range," Strickland added.

The Fall River Bulldogs Bobby Main took first place in the 135-pound weight class netting three pins and defeating his opponent in the finals 5-2.

Pool wants to offer 1st grade swimming curriculum

BY MEG FOX

Burney pool Manager Cindy White and Pat Pell, a lifeguard and former school teacher, think its important that children in this area know water safety and they hope to initiate a program within the local schools to do that.

They want to offer a twoweek swimming and water safety program to all first graders as part of their PE curriculum, White said.

With the help of Burney Elementary School teacher Marcy Schmidt, they are writing a grant request to the Burney-Fall River Education Foundation for $1,900 to cover the cost to transport about 110 first graders from Fall River Elementary School to the swimming pool on Bailey Avenue in Burney.

Burney students could walk to the pool.

While we live in an area surrounded by water, not that many children learn to swim, White said.

She and Pell presented their idea during the Oct. 21 IMAGE (Intermountain Action Growth Education) meeting in Burney.

Because the Education Foundation does not give grants for wages, White and Pell asked IMAGE members if the organization had any funding to pay Pell about $320 to run the program.

Shellisa Moore, community development coordina### tor for the Shasta County Department of Public Health in Burney, said the Partnership for the Publics Health has mini-grants that are open to non-profits for physical activities and suggested they apply.

"This is a great idea," commented Lynn Dorroh, IMAGE member and project director for Acorn Enterprises in Montgomery Creek.

In discussing their project, White said that although the Burney pool offers comprehensive swimming lessons in the summer, not everyone takes advantage of it.

Pell said she and several volunteers would work with about seven students at a time in the warm water of the therapy pool.

"Cold water turns a lot of people off," she said.

The therapy pool also has ramp, so that children can walk into the water. Their first priority is water safety.

We want children to know what to do if they fall in the water and what to do if a friend falls in, which is to go get help, said Pell.

They would also teach children the beginning elements of swimming such as bobbing and how to put their faces in the water.

Children who are already swimmers would be challenged to move ahead, Pell said.

Thanksgiving dinner Editor:

June Legerton, of Adin, hosted the Thanksgiving social at the home of Kathryn Purrington, on the 21st of November, with Julie Silva helping with the serving. It was Roast Beef, with a variety of veggies, served with coffee or wine and a delicious dessert of strawberries, marshmallows and whipped cream.

The table was decorated well in the thanksgiving theme to tablecloth, and dishes. Those who enjoyed the dinner were, Kathryn Purrington, Marjorie Poytress, Dianna Hockett, Julie Silva, Ruby Sunderman and Agnes Bartlett.

They had a pleasant surprise of member Margo Hillman who was up here from La Mirada, to witness the birth of her second grandchild who is due soon to be the consumer," Oilar said. With a U.S. Department of Agriculture, Value-Added Agricultural Product grant for $405,675, Fall River Wild Rice has developed and marketed a pre-cooked wild rice product.

Elmo helped us solve so many problems and was interested in the upkeeplike sending a load of gravel to keep down summertime dust.

"It s a package of precooked wild rice and water that takes two minutes to prepare," he said. "We are 'adding value to wild rice through retort processing."

Oilar wrote the grant or the new product after attending a food show and sampling salmon soup in a flexible package. "I thought we could do the same thing with our wild rice, so I started doing some research." It didn t go well at fist. "We did some tests with a food company in Ohio, but they were not able to produce what we wanted." At another food show two years ago in Paris, Oilar sampled prunes packaged by the ShoEi Foods Corp. Inc. of Japan. Their subsidiary, ShoEi Foods USA, in Marysville, was able to develop what Oilar and the rice growers were looking for through the retort processing method. "We renow on line with them and they do a tremendous job producing a super, high-quality product.' Three weeks ago, Fall River Wild Rice received a $100,000 Buy California Specialty Crop grant to expand the retort process line by mixing rice. "We redoing wild rice and Basmati rice, wild rice and brown rice, wild rice and jasmine rice, and whatever we can think of," Oilar said. And then, suddenly, sales dropped to zero.

"I was doing an in-store demo one day and the chips tasted terrible. I immediately called Trader Joes and asked them to taste the chips we had there and theirs were terrible, too."

The product manufacturer had used rancid oil.

"Once a label goes bad, it s bad," said Oilar. "We really considered dropping the product."

Instead, they took another look at it and developed a new, high-protein chip, which Horizon and Alaska Airlines agreed to distribute in February. The recent value-added grant was "critical," said Oilar. 'We vegot new packaging and we re going to reintroduce the product and put it in front of focus groups." His goal is to get into the bid cycle for public schools this spring. Oilar, who has a degree in agriculture marketing from Cal Poly, San Luis Obispo, moved here from Portland, Ore. when he was hired as general manager in August 1996. He has been president of the Fall River Valley Chamber of Commerce and varsity track coach at Fall River High School. He also serves on the board for the Private Industry Council. He wrote each of the three grants, which were edited by Office Manager Kathy Anderson "I write them and she corrects them and makes them look good," he said. And a good part of his time is spent in airplanes as he travels around marketing Fall River Wild Rice. "Over the past three weeks I was in New Orleans, Montreal, and Paris. Next week I go to L.A.," he said. "We retrying really hard to make this a profitable business for our growers." Fall River Wild Rice also has an on-line store at www.frwr.com where shoppers can find gift baskets or individual packages of chips (lightly salted, garlic, or sweet and sour wasabi), gourmet wild rice, organic wild rice, quick cook (35 minutes), and fully cooked/ ready to serve wild rice.

Safety tips shared as way to prevent injury

The downtown U-Turn, why not?

You are driving in downtown Burney and park at the right hand curb. Your transaction at the local business is completed.

You get back into your car and realize that your next stop requires you to travel in the opposite direction.

You look into your rear view mirror and do not see any traffic approaching. You turn your steering wheel to the left and make a U-turn. Suddenly you notice flashing red lights in your rear view mirror and wonder where they came from.

You pull to the right curb and the red lights follow. The officer approaches and tells you that you made an illegal U-turn.

Violations most often occur when the person is stopped at the right-hand curb and makes a 180-degree turn across all the traffic lanes. Turning across traffic is potentially dangerous for you and the other drivers.

Are there other times that you can t make a U-turn?

"It was established by farmers who were interested in controlling the processing of their wild rice," said Hiram Oilar, general manager of the Fall River Wild Rice plant on Osprey Road where the rice is processed and packaged.

Locally, about 1,800 acres are in wild rice, which isn t really rice at all, but a cereal grain and the only one native to the North American continent.

The plant, Zizania palustris, is a tall, aquatic grass that prospers in shallow lakes, marshes and streams.

Its seeds are harvested and then steamed, dried, dehulled, and cleaned to produce the dark brown grain.

"Being a cooperative has been a struggle," said Oilar.

But Fall River Wild Rice has come a long way.

The snack chips, made of wild rice, black beans and corn, are served on Horizon and Alaska Airlines and sold at hundreds of specialty food and grocery stores nationwide.

Fall River Wild Rice is also the third largest exporter of wild rice in the world.

The local rice is shipped in bulk to France, Germany, Denmark, England, New Zealand, Thailand, and Greece, where it is often blended with other products and sold under different labels.

In Thailand, Fall River Wild Rice is blended with jasmine rice and sent back to the United States for sale.

"Another company cooks and freezes the rice and it goes into Marie Callender products in Europe," Oilar said Oilar is currently developing a market for the product in Egypt.

In the past two years, the local label has gotten a boost from three grants totaling $641,000 to enhance existing products and develop new market strategies.

"Wild rice is expensive and What Fall River Wild Rice plans to develop and package is a soy-enhanced wild rice snack chip.

"And then we want to target the public school system and school lunch programs, where there is a growing market for healthier food," Oilar said.

Economical Harney has friendly, open look

By Associated Designs

Multipaned windows, lap siding and a trio of low-profile gables give a friendly, open look to the Harney. This modestly sized home is economical to build and fits comfortably on a small lot.

It is equally well-suited to the needs of a young family, a single person or empty nesters wishing to reduce their maintenance chores. The plan could easily be adapted for wheelchair accessibility.

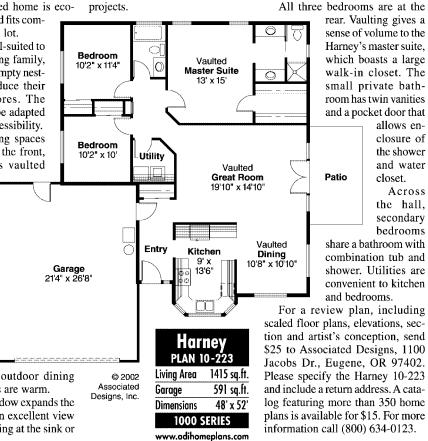

Family gathering spaces cluster together at the front, where a spacious vaulted great room/ dining area wraps around a step-saving kitchen. Sunlight spills in on two sides of these naturally bright rooms. Double doors swing open to access a small side deck or patio, close enough to the kitchen to invite outdoor dining when temperatures are warm. A wide bay window expands the kitchen, offering an excellent view of the street. Standing at the sink or stove, you can keep an eye on kids playing out front. There's plenty of counter space here too, enough for kitchen, particularly handy when two cooks to work together on meals, cookies, or other culinary projects.

The two-car garage has a direct entry that puts you almost in the carrying in groceries. A door at the rear leads to the back yard.
